

Jennifer Woolley

Aeras Global TB Vaccine Foundation

Jennifer Woolley is the Director of Advocacy at the Aeras Global TB Vaccine Foundation, a non-profit product development partnership with a mission to develop new tuberculosis vaccines and ensure their availability for all who need them. Ms. Woolley is responsible for Aeras' advocacy efforts globally, including engaging with key stakeholders in governments, civil society and in the community both in donor and endemic countries, and she participates in international collaborative efforts that focus on global health and eliminating tuberculosis.

Prior to joining Aeras, Jennifer was the Sexual Assault Advocacy Coordinator for the Virginia Sexual and Domestic Violence Action Alliance, where she coordinated statewide public policy initiatives, developed resources and provided public policy training for advocates. From 2000-2003, she provided resources and technical assistance for women state legislators and grassroots leaders at the Center for Policy Alternatives. She holds a BA in International Business and Economics from Cornell College and an MSW from Boston University.
